Returning Wounded Agree That Germans Do Small Harm but for Their Big Guns Which Are Directed Through Spying Airships; Many Thrilling Stories Told; Relatives Besiege Hospitals.

BY HERBERT TEMPLE.

London, Eng., Sept. 23.—Could all the amazing, graphic and thrilling war stories now being brought back by wounded British soldiers be compiled and published, they would make highly interesting reading. Every day hundreds of the injured are invalided home and they all have tales to tell. All the wounded soldiers who have arrived at Aldershot are stories of the remarkable artillery practice by the German guns, which they ascribe to the close cooperation between the guns and aeroplanes.

"Again and again," said a sergeant of the Northampton, "the aeroplanes came circling round above our guns but at the great height for our guns to reach them. We watched them, and whenever a flurrier of shells came, other material came down from the sky, a shower of shrapnel followed immediately, so well aimed that we invariably had to move to save ourselves from being annihilated."

"But for the guns we could have held our positions against them. Their rifle practice was worse than that of our third class shots."

A private of the Royal North Lancashire regiment, who had a piece of shrapnel in his knee, gave a graphic description of the surprise attack. "We had half a platoon here, and were sent out on outpost duty, 'somewhere in Belgium,' he had said. The place was a small town, and we were told that it was on his way back to the ambulance."

"We went out at dusk under an officer," he said, "and arrived in the dark at the position we had to take up. Scarcely had we taken up our position, when the enemy came over a campfire to make tea when, from a position 700 yards away, a hot rifle fire was opened on us."

"We did not wait for our tea to draw, but bolted for the nearest cover, the hedges and ditch at the roadside. It was the first time any of our chaps had been under fire, and we were all scared, but the officer sent a cry of 'hold on' and we replied with well aimed fire, the feeling of alarm quickly passing away."

"The German shooting was rotten, and we were in no great danger, until a shell pumped down close to us, and another quickly followed. The officer then saw it was time to go, and gave the order to retire. It was while retreating that I got the wound in my knee."

Private P. McQuillan, writes from "somewhere in France," to his mother in Ireland. "We were all beat up after four days of the hardest soldiering I ever dreamed of. I am, I think, the only one of our share of the German tank, who are a poor lot when it comes to a good square action in the open."

"Germans Would Not Wait." "We tried hard to get them many a time, but they would never wait for us when they saw the bright bits of steel at the business end of our rifles. Some of them were like the pigs on a killing day when they see the steel trap."

Some of them were like the pigs on a killing day when they see the steel trap. "I have heard of them taking the pigs on a killing day when they see the steel trap."

WOUNDED BRITISH SOLDIER TELLS OF UHLAN CHARGE AND BRITISH VICTORY

Wounded British Soldier Tells of Uhlán Charge and British Victory

London, Eng., Sept. 24.—A British infantry corporal, wounded in the hand and leg, gave a graphic description of the fighting he saw in France.

"Early in the morning," he said, "we were informed of the approach of the enemy, and were ordered to deploy and take cover over a wide front, which included woods and open country, with villages in the valley."

"Toward 10 o'clock we could hear the booming of guns, a sound we became used to on Salisbury Plain, and then the rattle of machine guns and rifles."

"A party of Uhlans dashed along the road through our firing line, and emptied more than one saddle, but more came, and then we were suddenly enveloped by machine guns, which were mounted on motorcars."

"We did not have much shelter where I was," he said. "We just had to do the best we could."

"The fire was frightfully heavy, but you know they cannot shoot, and waste an awful lot of ammunition. The artillery are worse, but even the artillerymen cannot shoot. It's the number that does it, nothing else."

"As soon as we shot one lot down another came up. That's what happened all the time. Their losses must be heavy, but they don't know it."

"I think a great many of our fellows were picked up in the trenches," he said. "I've been picked up twice, but I've been shot at twice. The Germans shelled us in the field hospital, but they didn't do much damage, you know, artillery don't unless they can shoot, and these couldn't."

"I've been picking up clothes as I came down," he went on, pointing to his shoes and socks. "These are French, but I'm not sure. I've been told that they were picked up and placed in a motor car."

"I think I lost some of my fellows," he said. "I don't know where they are. I don't know where they are. I don't know where they are."

"The Germans were like a great battering ram," he said. "They did not seem to mind how many were killed, and some of them were simply thrown away."

"At one place the German infantry filled the trenches and the men simply mowed down by our guns. It was terrible punishment."

"The Red Cross trains arrive," he said. "The first train I saw arrived at Waterloo, carried officers. First of all, those who were able to walk, were assisted to alight. What a sight! And several were smoking."

"Some of the wounded officers, whose injuries were not severe, were placed in taxicabs, motor cars and private omnibuses."

"Then the stretcher brigade turned its attention to the officers who remained in the 'wards' of the train. Pillows and blankets were placed on the stretchers, and the patients filled up the platform and entered the train."

"The first officer brought out was a captain, and a private, who was carrying a stretcher, and a man, who was carrying a stretcher, and a man, who was carrying a stretcher."

"A third man had his knees drawn up. All except one were looking cheery. Ambulance wagons and buses were waiting, and one by one the wounded were placed on beds and driven to the hospital."

"The R. A. M. C. and the ambulance corps were still engaged in tending the injured officers when a second train, loaded with red crosses, ran in at the adjoining platform."

"Soldiers in Good Spirits," he said. "The soldiers were flocking out of the carriages. The first group to walk to the cars must have been a sight to see. They were laughing and joking, and some were singing. They were in the best of spirits and jumped into the buses with the freshness of schoolboys."

"Some of the wounded, however, were more seriously injured. One man lay on a stretcher, which was allowed to rest on the ground for some time, and a doctor examined him and felt his pulse."

"Others, too weak to move much, were taken to a ward, where they were placed on beds, and given food and drink. They were very comfortable on the stretchers and blankets, with soft white pillows and cushions. They threw their blessings at the soldiers."

"The German commander did not respond to Gen. French's appeal for three days. By that time the British had managed to get their way out of the German trap by almost superhuman effort and at tremendous loss. They were in full retreat after Mons, when the French made casual mention of the failure of the French forces to resist the German advance."

Kitchener Compelled French Cabinet to Retire, American Is Informed.

New York, Sept. 21.—Dr. Fred S. Marsh, a physician who returned from the Olympic Games from Europe, is quoted today in the Evening World as stating he was informed by a high French official that it was Gen. Kitchener who forced the French cabinet to resign just after the outbreak of the war.

"When 100,000 British under Gen. French were opposed by 225,000 Germans of Gen. von Klueck's army at the Marne, French was in a desperate situation. After the first day's fighting, and when overwhelming forces of the Germans threatened to surround the entire British expeditionary force, Gen. French sent an earnest appeal for aid to the French military commander of that district, who was Gen. Joffre. Gen. French rushed to his assistance at once."

"The French commander did not respond to Gen. French's appeal for three days. By that time the British had managed to get their way out of the German trap by almost superhuman effort and at tremendous loss. They were in full retreat after Mons, when the French made casual mention of the failure of the French forces to resist the German advance."

CHOLERA CASES MENACE WHOLE AUSTRIAN ARMY

Rome, Italy, Sept. 24.—A dispatch from Vienna to the Giornale d'Italia tells of serious sickness in the Austrian army. The epidemic, which has been spreading since the outbreak of the war, is now threatening the whole of the Austrian army.

It is learned here that the first suspected case of cholera in Hungary was brought on September 15 to Budapest from the Galician battlefield. The bacteriological examination clearly showed Asiatic cholera.

The patient was immediately isolated in the hope of preventing further spread of the disease. Since then eight other cases have been discovered among the wounded who returned from Galicia. One case was found at Munkacs, another at Tokay and six at Buda-Pest, within an hour's ride of Vienna.
